It's a privilege to address you as one of the pioneering founders of North Western University (NWU), which is contributing to making efficient, innovative, and competent leaders for the public and private sectors of the country. Following the legacy with the aim of creating higher education opportunities for the students of Khulna and the southwestern region, North Western University started its glorious journey as the first ever UGC-approved private university established in Khulna in the spring-2013 semester with 440 students and the forefront slogan "Committed to World Class Education." At present, around 3000 students, 70 full-time faculty members, nearly half a hundred adjunct faculties, and more than a hundred officers and staff are running the activities of the university with utmost determination, diligence, and dedication. It is indeed a pleasure and pride that our university has already entered its 12th year of excellence and glory. The rampant progress of NWU has been a matter of true honor and great pride to witness.

Since 2013, a large number of our graduates and postgraduates have been obtaining higher degrees from reputed foreign universities across the world and have also been vitally contributing in respective professional fields through creativity, honesty, and excellence. As one of the private universities in the southwestern region of Bangladesh, our journey has not only prized accomplishments but deftly handled challenges and uncertainties as well.

Together with our entire team of academic and administrative officials, we hope to be able to carry forward the tradition of continuous improvement. I firmly believe that our university will play a key role in the expansion and development of higher education in the southwestern region and prove to be a proud contributor to nurturing truly patriotic scholars with mind and mission to serve the country selflessly. New types of equipment have been added to upgrade five laboratories, namely the Transportation Engineering Laboratory, Practical Surveying Laboratory, Geotechnical Engineering Laboratory, Environmental Engineering Laboratory, and Engineering Materials Laboratory. The creation of the Civil Engineering laboratories has had a profound impact on the success of the department in allowing opportunities for students like Plain Table, Engineering Chains, tapes, levels, prismatic compass, and theodolites, and the new addition is a modern high-quality Total Station (Kolida) (KTS 442UT) for accurate and digital levels. Undergraduate students use the laboratory as an integral part of their surveying coursework and obtain any topographic information that can help their design projects, such as highway design and land development. Moreover, students learn techniques about how to gather field data and use them for preparing maps with and faculty members to explore more extensive and comprehensive research and teaching activities.

Transportation Engineering Laboratory has been providing testing and design contributions since its inception in diverse areas including quality control and testing of highway materials, geometric design of highways, structural design of pavements, field investigations of highway projects, traffic control and management, accident analysis and safety measures, feasibility study of transport projects, preparation and evaluation of contractual documents. This is just one of the impressive new laboratory additions where the main equipment is available for the identification and determination of the properties of bituminous binders and asphalt mixtures. The newly added equipment is the penetration testing machine, loss on heating test apparatus, softening point test apparatus, impact testing apparatus, ACV testing apparatus, flakiness and elongation index testing apparatus, CBR testing apparatus, Marshall method of mix design apparatus, ovens of different kinds, etc.

Practical Surveying Laboratory of the Department of Civil Engineering, North Western University, continued to provide service of equipment maintenance and production of special surveying accessories in support of teaching & learning and research activities. It contains many conventional and modern surveying instruments both traditional and modern instruments on a week-long field's survey program. Geotechnical Engineering Laboratory of North Western University is equipped with all modern types of machinery required for advanced research and consultancy services. The primary aim of the Geotechnical Lab is to advance the theory and application of soil mechanics. This laboratory provides both students and faculty members with an excellent opportunity to conduct quality research. Along with other basic tests on soil, the newly attached equipment is Sand Cone Apparatus, Unconfined Compression Testing Machine, and Direct Shear Testing Machine.

Environmental Engineering Laboratory of North Western University has always been a resourceful place for conducting advanced research and consultancy. The new addition to the lab is Multimeter (HANNA, HI-9813-61) (pH, TDS, EC), Turbidity meter (HANNA-TU-2016), Dissolved Oxygen Meter (LUTRON, DO-5509) and UV-VIS Spectrophotometer (FAITHFUL).

Engineering Materials Laboratory of North Western University has almost all kinds of apparatus that provide excellent support for material testing and consultancy.
